Hanna Rogan is a research fellow at FFI's Terrorism Research Group. Trained in linguistics (Arabic, French, Albanian) and Balkan and Middle Eastern studies, she has researched various aspects of contemporary militant Islamism.

Ms. Rogan's main research interests include militant Islamism and communication strategies, particularly the use of new communication technologies – a topic she has published and lectured extensively on.

Her research on radical Islamism in the Maghreb is currently underway; the project focuses on the Islamist insurgency in Algeria, including its regional and international implications.

Ms. Rogan has presented her research findings at academic institutions and conferences in Norway, as well as internationally, and to the public media.
